

Patricia L. Pignato

November 12, 2025

Hampton - Patricia L. Pignato was born in Franklin, Massachusetts, surrounded by cousins and lifelong friends who remained close to her throughout her life. On the day the Lord called her home, the world lost a remarkable woman—and those who knew her lost a gift we were lucky to receive.

Patricia was sharp, well-read, and endlessly curious. A conversation with her was never small talk; she challenged your thinking and widened your perspective, shaped by both her education and the many places she lived. Her straight-A record in high school earned her admission into a medical-track program, where she met the man she would love for nearly sixty years, John Pignato, Sr. After a brief courtship, they married, and Patricia followed him across the world as he served in the military. They lived in multiple countries, and she watched with pride as he rose through the ranks. Those years abroad ignited her lifelong love for culture, art, and the beauty of the world.

When they settled on the New Hampshire seacoast, Patricia raised her two children and built a career in real estate, where her warmth and extroverted nature flourished. It was also where her extraordinary artistic talent emerged. Her attention to detail and the emotion in her work revealed how she saw the world—with appreciation, tenderness, and a belief that beauty exists everywhere. Her paintings made nature even more breathtaking, reflecting the way she saw people and especially her four grandchildren, whom she adored.

Patricia is survived by her son, John, her daughter-in-law Carline, and her four cherished grandchildren. She loved her family, her country, New England sports, a good book, and every moment spent with the people she held closest.

Her legacy is one of kindness, compassion, and unconditional love. Heaven gained an angel, and we are forever grateful to have walked this life with her.
