“ I came across a Christmas card that Rosemary gave me providing support during the first holiday season after my mother died. It was an incredibly dark time in my life. I read it and realized that it still provided strength during this tough time of year without missed loved ones. Rosemary was always so kind to me and feel as if she was never judging me. I was never close to being perfect and felt that she accepted this and me despite my imperfections. There needs to be more people in the world with this beautiful quality. Her legacy will live on through her family, friends, and hopefully anyone she had contact with on her path of life. She will be missed.

“ Mom you were one of the greatest inspirations in my life. Your strength and courage to get through every day knowing how much pain you were in always amazed me. Your drive to "get at least one thing done by myself" was astonishing. You put others before yourself and rarely if ever complained (well unless I set the fire alarm off at 2am making popcorn.) Although I worked a lot during the week. You made sure you were up to make sure I got home ok and especially had something to eat. I was glad when my schedule change allowed us to have dinner together every night. And though you thought you were bothering me at work, I loved very much when you would call to check in on me and often inform me of what we were having for dinner oh and that I was cooking it heh. Mostly what I'll remember though is your daily send off to me as I went to work " Have a good day, Drive Safely and I Love you Matt" with my usual response " I will mom and I love you too, Just call if you need anything." Well mom I am going to have to change that last part now and say one last time "I will always drive safely as if you were in the car with me, I will love you forever and now just rest in peace I will be ok.

Matt, my deepest sympathy to you and your siblings. Your mother was a strong woman and loved by many. Find peace in your memories of her and remember someday you will be together again.
